

Today we are witness to an age inundated with competing information and amplified by social media, as we stand at the intersection of novel ideas and antiquated beliefs. In this complex world, made even more incomprehensible by widespread phenomena such as “fake news”, alternative facts, and superficial analysis, it may not be an exaggeration to say that we are at the turn of a new era where making distinction between truth and fiction gets tougher by the day.

In such times, the Cornell Policy Review seeks to emerge as an agent of “insightful content, (to create an) informed world” – this being the newly identified Vision for the Review. This Vision is the result of the new leadership, garnered by insights from Cornell Institute for Public Affairs faculty, and the Cornell Policy Review’s Alumni Advisory Board.

Keeping this Vision in mind, the Cornell Policy Review (CPR) will continue to inform its readers through insightful articles, policy analyses, podcasts, interviews, case studies, and original research, with a renewed commitment to providing this information in an accessible, evidence-based and non-partisan manner. In doing so, it is the effort of the Cornell Policy Review to remain cognizant of the events, ideas, and trends that affect public policy while being mindful of public welfare and inclusive of different opinions and points of views.

At CPR, we believe that the written word and a thoughtful analysis of public policies that affect the people, can not only contribute to better informed public administration professionals, policymakers, and researchers, but can also bring about a positive change for the community at large. By informing public policy discourse through high quality and accessible content on our exclusively online journal, we are better positioned to highlight relevant topics with both speed and accuracy.

Supported by the wealth of academic resources available at the Cornell Institute for Public Affairs and Cornell University, we look ahead to the academic year 2017-18 to serve as a platform to share insightful and diverse perspectives from all across the globe. Committed to highlighting the issues that shape the way people live and society progresses, we seek to publish insights on a myriad of public policy themes: from provocative article analyses to original research, we have brought together dynamic perspectives to ignite discussion about innovations in public policy.

Finally, what drives us in our effort to produce quality content is our diverse readership across the globe, committed to creating better public, private, and not-for-profit institutions.

We thank you, our readers, for your continued support and encouragement. We sincerely hope that you will consider contributing to the discussion.

Arpit Chaturvedi

(Editor-in-Chief)

Arpit Chaturvedi

Arpit Chaturvedi is the Editor-in-Chief of the Cornell Policy Review and a second year Master of Public Administration Fellow at the Cornell Institute for Public Affairs. Also, he is an MBA from Symbiosis Centre for Management and Human Resource Development and a Bachelor of Arts with Honours in History from Kirori Mal College, University of Delhi. Previously, as a talent and human resource management consultant, he has worked for a year at Right Management - the consulting arm of the Fortune 500 Manpower Group. His experience in dealing with developmental issues ranges from working for labour development as an intern, in factories at various regions of India in both, private sector organizations such as Philips and public sector undertakings such as Powergrid Corporation of India Ltd., to HR consulting for large Indian and multi-national firms (including Fortune 500 organizations). In the past year, Arpit worked as a Legislative Assistant to a Member of Parliament in India, where he researched on various parliamentary bills, handled communications as well as community enquiries and facilitated equitable distribution of funds for development schemes. Arpit has also worked as an Apprentice for a year with the National Commission for Scheduled Castes, a constitutional body set up by the Government of India where he worked for the socio-economic inclusion and justice of the scheduled caste population in India. His recommendations on “The state of Labour Exploitation of Scheduled Caste Population in the brick manufacturing sector” have been officially adopted by the Commission. He has also worked with the National Foundation for Communal Harmony to promote diversity and inclusion of various communities in India. His core interests are in the field of socio-economic development of underserved groups as well as in promoting intergroup harmony, a subject on which he has also authored a book titled “Our Egalitarian Universe?” and edited a monograph authored by some of the top civil servants of India, titled “Not Without Her - Communal Harmony”.

View all posts